Oh the drama!

Research creation as participatory theatrebased method to accommodate conflict in urban planning

Cecilie Sachs Olsen cecilies@oslomet.no

CONflict in TRAnsformation

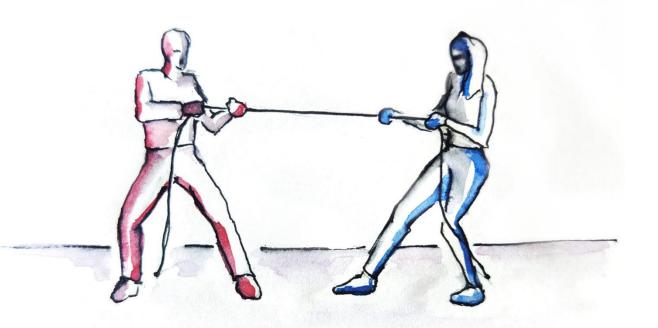

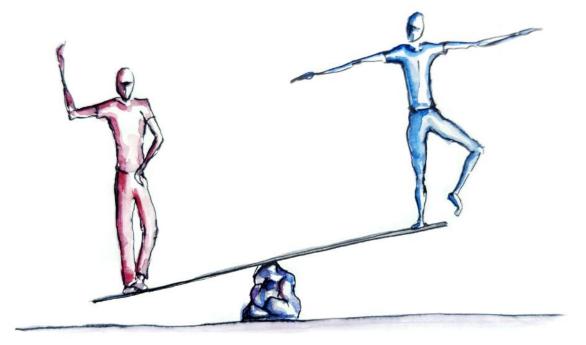

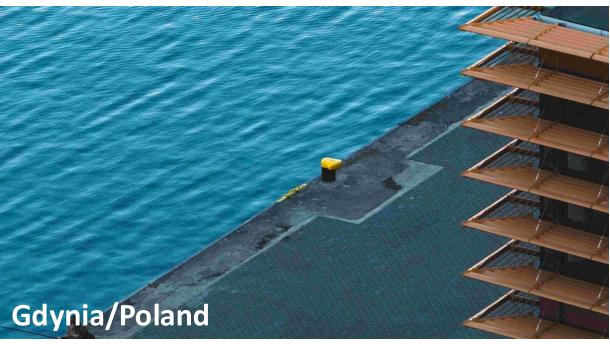

Case	Drammen/Norway	Gdynia/Poland	Genk/Belgium	Tilburg/Netherlands
Site	Bragernes: residential neighbourhood adjacent to the city centre	Redlowska Glade: green, recreational public space close to the city centre		Tilburg North: redevelopment area located between residential area and highway surrounding city
Context	Facing large-scale transformation process as the city hospital located there is moving to another part of the city	City authorities planning to sell site for commercial development, but deciding instead to designate it to recreation	Plans for redevelopment to solve water issues, make the area more climate resilient and accessible for recreation	The 'fluid identity' of the area leading to frequent selection as potential location for climate infrastructure and other projects
Conflict	Whether the hospital building should be demolished or preserved in the redevelopment process	Lack of transparency in planning processes and residents' lack of access to decision making	Residents opposing to take certain measures (on their private property) to benefit the development and the community	Too many redevelopment plans and visions, which the area could not contain
Location	High school next to hospital	Local theatre in city centre	Public space in/and near the valley	Community house in the area
Participants	Planners and social workers from the municipality, architects, developers of the site, residents, hospital workers, youths and resident-pensioners	Planners and social workers from the municipality, policymakers, activists, residents, teachers, journalists, NGOs representatives, resident- pensioners	Residents interacting with climate refuge, policymakers, civil servants, residents, representatives of action-groups	Residents and business owners, neighbourhood initiatives, planners and community managers from the municipality, allotment garden members, local politicians

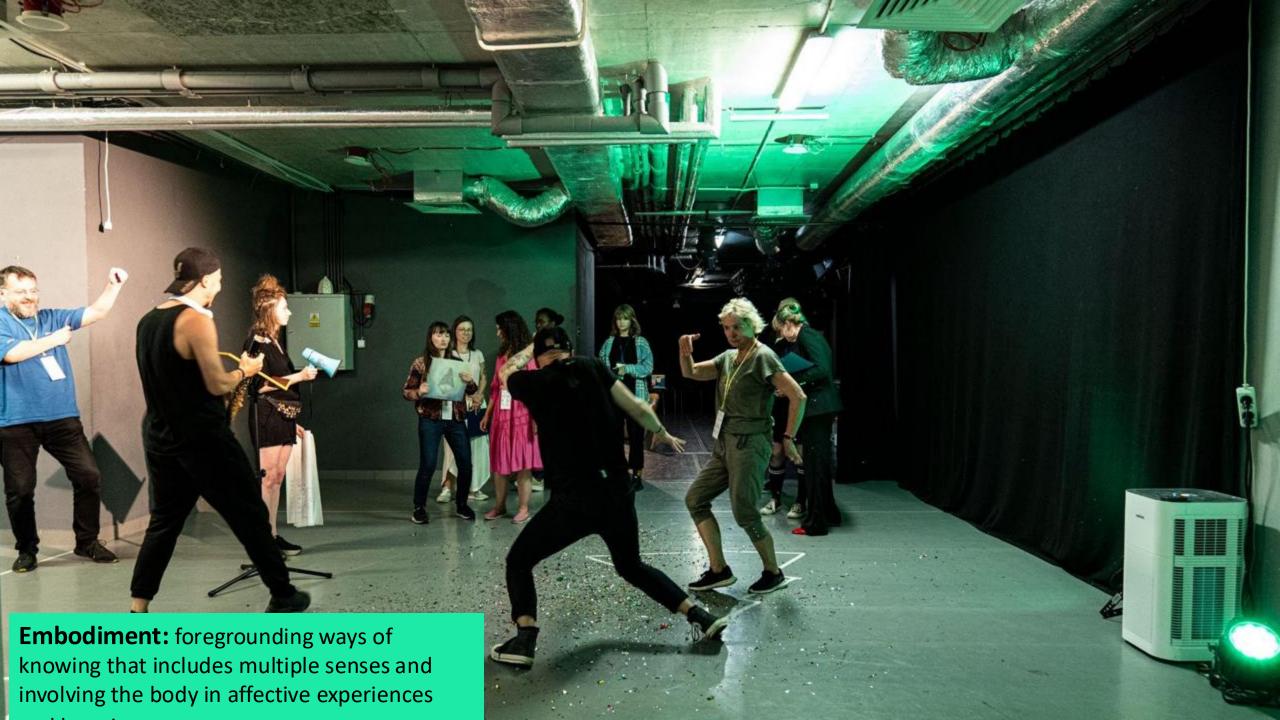

ECHO CHAMBER FOR DEMOLITION

ECHO CHAMBER FOR PRESERVATION

